Tinley High School District Rejected By 577-290 Vote

The proposed Tinley Park high school district which has engaged the interest of the residents of three townships in two counties ever since last fall, finally came to a show down last Saturday when a public election was held in four school districts in Bremen, Rich and Frankfort townships.

A very violent opposition to the creation of the proposed new district manifested itself several months ago and of late the opposition grew stronger as was attested by the meetings held in Sedan Prairie and Tinley Park. Residents of the south subdivision in Tinley also expressed their opposition to the proposed district. Attorney A. H. Krusemark of Frankfort headed the farmers of a portion of Frankfort township and of Sedan Prairie in their determination to vote the proposition down. At the close of the election when the ballots were all in the results showed that the proposed district was defeated overwhelmingly with a 2 1-2 to 1 opposition vote.

In Sedan Prairie 228 votes were cast and everyone of them was against the new district. In Frankfort township 176 votes were registered as against and 4 in favor of the district. In Tinley Park the vote stood about 170 for and 20 against. In the Forest Ridge district only 9 votes were cast in favor of the proposition. As the result of this overwhelming defeat the matter can not come up again for another two years. Attorney Krusemark stated emphatically that if the proposition is again submitted it will be again defeated.

The proposal, advanced by a group of Tinley Park residents, would have been the first step toward the establishment of a high school for 145 students who now attend schools outside the area. It was opposed by a group who contended the measure would increase the education tax levy and would deprive the children of advantages of large institutions.

The total vote cast was 577 against and 209 for the proposition.

GENE AUTRY'S THRILL CIRCUS COMING TO SOLIER FIELD, CHICAGO, JULY 23

With $15,000 posted plus the entries fees that should swell the pot to $20,000, dangling before their eyes, the greatest cowboys and cowgirls of the nation are preparing to leave their native haunts for Chicago to compete in Gene Autry's Flying A Ranch Stampede and Thrill Circus at Soldier Field, running seven nights, starting July 23, with matinees scheduled for Saturday and Sunday, July 25 and 26.

Autry, who will personally direct the program and will appear at each performance in a stellar role, has turned the prize money over to officials of the Rodeo Association of America, guaranteeing Chicagoans thrill seekers of a chance to see the richest rodeo of the midwestern season.

Autry's personal contribution to each program will be the exhibiting of his famous motion picture horse Champ, and the singing of several popular western ballads with the Melody Ranch Boys. LAKE TRIPS MAKE A WONDERFUL DIVERSION

Residents of the Great Lakes city ports and adjacent territory are fortunate that their location on this great inland body of water permits the taking of a short vacation which is being urged by our government for health, efficiency, and morale, and at the same time conserve their tires and motor cars, according to E. J. Goebel, passenger traffic manager of the Georgian Bay Line.

"Seven day Great Lakes cruises fit into the national picture of providing rest and recreation, more needed during war time than peace time, without the use of motor cars or at least only a very limited use to get to this port," explains Mr. Goebel.

Joseph B. Eastman, director of Defense Transposition, recently issued a statement in which he declared: Vacations are desirable from the standpoint of public health, efficiency and morale, and vacation business has furnished a means of livelihood to many people in various parts of the country. Clearly, however, private passenger cars should not now be used for extensive vacation travel, and if such travel should be concentrated in large volume on the railroad and bus lines during the summer months, there is danger of serious congestion.

A cruise vacation is all rest, only one packing and unpacking. Because of the heavy season and the limited number of cruises, travelers should make their reservations early to avoid disappointment.

be represented by the Honorable J. J. Doody, Co ordinator.

Thomas R. Heaney, High Secretary will officiate as master of ceremonies and will introduce distinguished guests and speakers.

Streamlined Distribution Increases Farm Income

Consumers Heeded, Marketing Plans Are Developed, Standards Raised.

For years Jefferson county, Kentucky, growers sent their Irish potatoes into northern markets to compete with plentiful supplies from other sections of the country.

When the 1941 harvest season opened last July with the northern market heavily glutted, grower-members of the St. Matthews Produce Exchange, Jefferson County Co-operative, prepared to give up potatoes as a cash crop.

In a last desperate effort to salvage their cash crop, R. W. Hite, president of the exchange, called his membership together for a meeting with a group of distributors and restaurant operators. Instead of trying to move the potatoes into overloaded outside markets, the growers agreed with several distributors to seek to develop a market within the state through a "Kentucky Potato Campaign."

The resulting drive enabled the stores to move a large percentage of the crop locally and to boost prices paid the association 40 per cent. Now, instead of reducing their production, the 150 members of the exchange plan a 10 per cent increase this year in line with the federal government's request for greater production of fresh fruits and vegetables to aid the "Food for Victory" program.

The Kentuckians' experience is one of many examples of how growers throughout the country are attacking the major problem created by the increased production called for in the "Food for Victory" drive—finding profitable markets for the great crops of fresh fruits and vegetables now ripening in the fields and orchards of America.

Production no longer is the problem—farmers throughout the nation are responding wholeheartedly to the government's appeal for more fresh fruits and vegetables for America's dining tables. This year's crop yields, intention reports of the department of agriculture indicate, will be the largest since 1933.

Production increases in certain crops and in certain sections of the country are tremendous. Through June 13, the department of agriculture reported, rail shipments of commercial truck crops were 13 per cent greater than a year ago. Movement was heavier for beans, beets, carrots, cauliflower, green corn, cucumbers, mixed vegetables, onions, spinach, cantaloupes, strawberries and Irish potatoes. During one two-week period alone, shipment of commercial early potatoes rose nearly 2,000 cars above the corresponding period of 1941.

Growers Improve Production.

Along the fruit front increases as large as those for fresh vegetables are not likely—it takes years to develop new fruit trees. However, growers are expected to improve production through more applications of fertilizers, better orchard management practices and elimination of as much waste as possible in production, harvesting and processing.

With production under control, the nation's growers now must make sure that their "vitamin bullets" reach the 130,000,000 Americans for whom they are intended.

As Secretary of Agriculture Wickard recently pointed out,

FARM TO RETAIL STORE COOP METHOD

Members of the Pennsylvania Co-operative Potato Growers association market 60 per cent of their output by moving it direct from farms in 45 counties to nearby retail stores. As a result, the 848 growers marketing through the association last year got 80 cents of the retail dollar, far above the national average share. An association truck is shown unloading potatoes at the back door of a large retail store.

production is "only the first step. Food, as one of the necessities of total war, is effective only when it is in the right form, at the right place, and at the right time."

Realizing more than ever that their job does not end with the harvest but instead extends to the consumer's market basket, farmers are paying increasing attention to the necessity of streamlining the distribution system to eliminate waste and to increase their own cash returns. With fruit and vegetable growers throughout the country getting only 35 cents of the retail dollar for their sales through all trade channels, growers are seeking to perform their own operations at the lowest possible cost while at the most economical marketing channels.

Working with distributors, extension directors, county agents and heads of state colleges of agriculture, growers are developing marketing programs and are making organized efforts to raise grade and pack standards to meet consumer demand. Movements of early season poor varieties and immature produce, shipments of which in the past built "consumer resistance" to better grades during peak movements, are being reduced.

Growers are building their home markets, with the active aid of distributors, extension services and agricultural leaders. Retail distributors, chain and independent, at the request of growers, are staging timely advertising and promotion campaigns.

In brief, growers are striving to place marketing on a non-speculative basis and to develop

Find More Women In British Jails

War Blamed for Increases in Female Inmates.

LONDON.—"There are twice as many women in Britain's prisons today as ever before."

Miss Lillian Barker, only woman prison commissioner in this country, startled a number of people with that statement at a London luncheon.

She summed up the causes for such an increase in female crimes under two headings.

"It's among the young people where women have failed," she said. "It's the hardest job in the world to make young girls understand their responsibility towards their country, their towns, and their homes."

War was the second factor. Social disorders and home complications, she said, had been greatly aggravated by the blitz and by war conditions in general.

"Our work has increased enormously since the war," she said. "I am becoming most alarmed now to find the prisons so full. And the women who are going there are not all poor girls."

"Young people today just don't seem to want to take responsibility for anything. They just want to live their lives and go their own way irrespective of the needs of their country."

"We women must have been very lax in our education of young people to have allowed them to grow up without ever learning to take responsibility. And the blame does not fall only on teachers in the school-rooms."

Boss Paid Triple for Stork's Visit to Worker

FORT WORTH, TEXAS.—Soap-maker Horace Ogle walked straight to the office of his boss, E. O. Gillam. He had just returned from the hospital.

"You recall, Boss," he said, grinning, "how you promised me $100 when my baby arrived?"

"Yes," said Gillam, the soap factory owner.

"And Boss, remember I asked about twins, and you said that would be $200."

"Yes," and Ogle drew a deep breath. "Well, it's triplets."

Gillam wrote a check for $300 and went over himself to see the three girls at All Saints hospital. They weighed from four pounds, 11 ounces, to five pounds, two ounces.

Young Radio Fans Cause Chilean Nazi Spy Scare

SANTIAGO, CHILE.—A "wire-tapping spy plot" against the Chilean navy, uncovered by telegraph linesmen and Valparaiso detectives, collapsed when Minister of Defense Alfredo Duhalde announced that youthful radio fans had used the telegraph lines as antennae for their home-made radio set.

The official report, drawn up by investigating authorities, read as follows:

"In a boarding house for pupils of a German college in the town of Cerro Alegre, some boys who are radio fans took advantage of the proximity of telegraph wires that passed close to their window to use them as antennae, and connected them with receivers made by them."

'Sighted Girl, Married Same,' Laconic Message

NEW ORLEANS.—When Cyril Harvey McGuire, New Orleans youth connected with a Burbank, Calif., airline station, wanted to tell his mother he was married, he took a leaf from the book of Donald Francis Mason, the naval hero who messaged: "Sighted sub, sank same."

Mrs. McGuire was awakened one morning recently to receive this telegram: "Sighted girl, married same; Margie and I send love, Cyril."

He followed with a letter giving more details, such as that the bride's full name had been Marjorie Crawford, of San Diego and Los Angeles.

DES MOINES, IOWA.—"There's no place like jail," is the report that one inmate gives the public after spending a year at the expense of Polk county.

The reason the jail is so good is because jailer Tom Rielly often uses his own money to buy chicken, smokes and ice cream for the prisoners.

Rielly spends much of his time having appointments with prisoners in order to discuss their problems with them and help them when he can.

United Nations Eating Away at Nazi Morale ... India Still a Big Headache for England

Bell Syndicate—WNU Features.

WASHINGTON.—Reports of the pounding of German objectives by bombers, and air activities in general against the Nazis, are not exaggerations. Nor are reports about aid to Russia. President Roosevelt seems to be playing a dirty sort of trick on the Japanese. He is doing exactly what he said he would!

Meaning that he promised right after Pearl Harbor that he would not permit Hitler's Far Eastern ally to play the Nazi strategy by diverting all American aid to the Southwest Pacific. As any Nazi spy who is active enough can find out, planes are still pouring to Britain and Russia, and this is the real explanation of Germany's present troubles.

The increased tempo of the air attacks has diverted a tremendous amount of German air strength from the Russian front, and according to the London reports the United Nations are using their newly obtained superiority.

Frequently nowadays the British reports admit more losses of their own than of the enemy. Fortunately, these reports are not to be accepted without a bit of translation because of the extraordinary conservatism of the British claims about enemy planes shot down one can always be sure that the number of enemy losses claimed is a minimum, not a maximum.

Once She's Knocked Out:

Obviously the United Nations are concentrating on Germany, certain that if they once knock her out, the remainder of the war is only a question of time. With increasing air superiority, both on the Russian and the Atlantic fronts, it is not so much a question of military achievement as it is of destruction of German morale.

In appraising the judgment of President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill in thus concentrating on Germany, and letting Japan, for the time being, get away with murder, one should remember that it was the collapse of German morale in the last war which brought peace, rather than smashing military victories. The German armies were never driven back to their own soil. They were still on a line deep in France when the armistice was signed.

In short the present campaign is directed at bringing about a collapse inside Germany. The effort is to take advantage of the weakness clearly shown in Hitler's last broadcast, which incidentally merely reinforces all the grapevine reports extending across the borders. Hope here is that when December comes, and the gloom of another German winter, the end of the war, so far as Europe is concerned, may be brought about.

Enormous Racial and Religious Difficulties

India is proving a bigger headache for Britain than Palestine was before the war. In the huge area stretching down from the "Top of the World," Mt. Everest, to the point opposite Ceylon, there are racial and religious difficulties even more devastating to any proposed application of rhyme or reason than were those which so worried the British government about "Zion."

There is one important difference, which probably makes the solution harder than the Palestine problem. It was generally recognized with respect to Palestine that if the British government would simply take its hands off, and leave the whole thing to work itself out (self-determination, to use Woodrow Wilson's phrase) there was no doubt about what would happen. The Arabs would have started programs which would make those of Poland half a century ago look like picnics. There would not have been any Jews left in Palestine in a little while.

This picture made it obvious, even to the most cantankerous critic of British policy in Palestine, that Britain simply could not get out.

But in India there is no such certainty. The Hindus outnumber the Moslems roughly around three to one. But there are many shrewd observers, among them Rep. George H. Tinkham of Massachusetts, who has spent a great deal of time in India; they believe that one Moslem can whip at least five Hindus.

So if a cat and dog fight should develop between these two great groups there is no certainty as to who would be the final victor. All that is sure is that millions of both groups would be killed before one side conquered, or both dropped from exhaustion.

India is more complicated, on a big scale, than Ireland. The Free State people contend, of course, that they ought to have Ulster—the British, that they should not. There is a minority in Ulster who want to join the Free State, but it is very clear that a majority in Ulster do not.

PRIVATE PURKEY IN LOVE AND WAR

Dear Ma—

There is not much to write about and anyhow even if there was the top sarge wood not give me time enough to write about it. I am well and feel stronger than ever with puzzles me on account of if I did half as much work when I was in civvies I would be a fizzy wreck long ago. I guess it must be that a jeep goes on doing what's asked of him in the army knowing it won't do him no good to kick and he knows he would get no sympathy if he got run down.

I see where we declared war on the Balkan states Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary. When it first come over the radio that we declared war on three states extra it sort of jarred me on account of we was already fighting so many states that I am always one or two states behind. But when I found out it was only Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary I felt easier. I got no friends in none of them and the only Hungarian I knew played in a orchestra witch was pretty bad. Everybody is in the war now so a few more do not make no difference I guess.

Well, mom, do not worry about me as from all I hear it is softer being here in the army than being a plain civvies. The situation back home is very heartbreaking to me. New York and a lot of other cities is so dark nights it is more lonesome going out after dark than it would be to stay home.

Gas is going to be harder than ever to get, the government is talking about taking tires away from everybody, all parking lots at the beaches have been closed at night and there is talk of forbidding bus travel except on business, so it is just a laugh now when anybody talks about keeping out of the army so he can do as he pleases.

Gosh, mom, I guess you and pop take more orders right now in a day than I get in the army in a week. All people in civvies life have got on me is that they don't have to peel potatoes. The radio keeps talking about ceiling troubles back home and I still hope nothing has happened to your ceiling yet, although you did not answer my last letter about it.

I hope you are all fixed on priorities also whatever they are. Everybody seems to be having them. Sergeant Mooney says I need not worry about having them as I had them when I was a boy.

John Bennett is in my outfit and he is always good for a laugh. He says he just ran across the most cookoo jeep in the army. He says he saw him with a homemade fly trap catching flies. At first he thought he was just nuts but when he seen him doing it four days in a row he demanded an explanation and found the nitwit was catching them to feed a pet frog which he keeps in his tent as a mascot.

It takes all kinds of men to make an army but this is the first time I knew it also took a fly trap and a frog. Well this will have to be all. I get pretty homesick at times of course, mom, and I wish I could get back to see you and pop often but on the other hand I don't guess I could stand life back in a city with so many restrictshuns and with everybody giving orders about one thing and another.

Your loving son,
Oscar.

IS IT JUST IN FUN?
With all the bulletins, warnings, radio talks, etc., being made to save tires and gas by slow driving, one has only to stand on almost any open road in America to see that thousands of drivers are brazenly ignoring the whole matter. This driver should be put well near the top of Fifth Columnists, and, what's more, the police are almost as guilty in their lackadaisical attitude about him.

DIRECT MARKETING IN S. CAROLINA

Farmers, seeking to solve transportation problems created by the war and also find more profitable markets for their produce, are moving much of their produce as directly as possible from farm to retail stores. Here L. C. White (right), field buyer for the Atlantic Commission company, watches peaches being loaded onto a truck at a packing shed operated by members of the Ridge Peach and Vegetable association at Ridge Spring, S. C. The truck takes the fresh peaches directly to retail stores.

Rural America Losing Youths to Cities

Human tides held back in rural areas by lack of employment in industrial centers from 1932 to 1941 now are flowing cityward at accelerated speeds, in the opinion of Dr. A. R. Mangus, department of rural sociology, Ohio State university.

Dr. Mangus recently issued a report of a survey made in Ross county to find what had happened to the 4,629 young men and women who were between the ages of 18 and 27 when the census was taken in April, 1940. The survey made in March, 1942, disclosed that 1,200 of those young men and 800 of the young women left the county in the two years since the census was taken.

The survey also showed that industry took more young men from the county than the number who enlisted or were inducted into the army. A larger percentage of both young men and women left villages with less than 2,500 population than went from farm homes.

GHOST PLANE

By ARTHUR STRINGER

W. N. U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: To keep Norland Airways in business Alan Slade agrees to fly a so-called scientist named Frayne and his partner, Karnell, to the Anawotio river in search of the trumpeter swan. With the proceeds Slade's partner, Cruger, buys a Lockheed plane, which is stolen. When he returns from the Anawotio Slade starts out to recover the plane. In this he is being helped by an eskimo named Umanak and by his old prospector friends, Zeke and Minty. Acting on a hunch Slade has gone to Frayne's camp and has discovered that the missing plane is hidden there. Slim Tumstead, a flyer who has lost his license for drinking and is little more than an outlaw, has been flying it for Frayne. But when Slade attempts to examine the plane's cargo he is knocked unconscious by Karnell. Tumstead saves him from being killed by Karnell, only to abandon him later on a deserted island because he "knows too much." Tumstead has just taken off again, after leaving Slade with only a knife, a pound of German army chocolate, a can of "bully" beef and what looks like an empty tin.

Now continue with the story.

CHAPTER XIV

He placed the knife on the shore slope. Beside it he placed the pound of German chocolate, and beside that again the tin of bully-beef. After studying them for a long time he reached for the tobacco tin.

This, when he opened it, proved not to be entirely empty. In it, to his surprise, he found half a dozen steel fishhooks.

He stared at them for a full minute, remembering how more than one bush pilot had the habit of carrying such things in his emergency equipment. They gave a promise of food, in case of a forced landing in a wilderness threaded with waterways.

Then, with a gasp of apprehension, he crawled about the slope, carefully retrieving the scattered lengths of cord that had been cut from his wrists and ankles. The best of them were only a few feet in length. But he had proof enough of their strength. And when knotted together they would provide him with a fish line that might land anything from an inconnu to a five-pound whitefish.

That gave him the courage to climb the rocky ledge behind him and examine his island. There was growth enough about him, he saw, to make a shelter of some sort, growth enough for firewood and the smoking of fish. And along the western shore where the slopes ended in sedgy meadows his gaze came to rest on a wide field of bulrushes. That gave him new hope.

He was alone in an empty world. But as he stood straight on his lonely ridge of rock he told himself that he hadn't yet reached the end of his rope.

Two embattled and odd-looking figures groped their way northward between the muskies and the rocky hogbacks that stretched out to the skyline beyond Lake Avikaka. Each man carried a rifle and a cartridge belt that bristled with shells. Each was further burdened down with a blanket roll and a grub bag. From the waist of one dangled a belt-ax, from the waist of the other swung a skillet and tea pail.

They went on, stoically slapping at black-flies and mosquitoes, until weariness overtook them and a lowering sun told them it was time to call it a day. Then they made camp, cooked their bacon and flapjacks, adjusted their mosquito bars, and rolled up in their worn and smoke-stained four-pointers.

When morning came they broke camp and once more hit the trail. They saw the sun climb higher in the heavens and the muskies become fewer as they advanced into a country of bolder rock ridges with a scattering of tamarack along their southern slopes. They saw the shadows lengthen and the light once more thin out. And once more they made camp, and slept, and pushed on again.

"We're on the proper trail all right," observed Minty as he mounted a knoll and surveyed the surrounding landscape. "There's the black-water lake I skirted on my way back."

"There's been folks here before us," asserted Zeke, pointing to where scrub spruce had been cut along the hill slope.

"From the first crack out o' the box," said Minty, "I had a queer feelin' about that two-eyed swan-hunter. I knew he wasn't edgin' up into this district of ours for any good."

"Then why's he here?"

"That's what I'm a-goin' to find out," retorted the grizzled old prospector, "before he gets another sneakin' shot at my carcass."

It was as they were circling cautiously along the westerly arm of the lake that Zeke stopped short on a ridge crest that ended in a deep-water bayou. For moored close in under a cliff there he saw the scarred and sun-bleached wings of a plane.

"That's the Snow-Ball Baby," was Minty's sudden exclamation.

"That's Lindy's old crate all right," agreed the perplexed Zeke. "But where's our puddle-jumper?"

They still hesitated in their approach. But curiosity finally overcame them. When they found no pilot there, after invading its cabin, they regarded each other for a moment of silence.

"If they want to do it Injin style," said Minty, "it's okay with me."

"I don't like the look o' this," Zeke finally asserted.

"Chances are he's scoutin' round on foot," maintained Minty as he clambered ashore. But Zeke, who remained to assess the cabin's contents, shook a dubious head.

"There's grub and extra gas in there," he reported when he rejoined his companion. "There's even blankets and fly nets and one o' them new-fangled air mattresses."

"Then you'll see him headin' back here pronto," Minty persisted.

But at the end of an hour's wait the azure of his optimism was shadowed by a cloud or two.

"Something's happened to that boy," averred Zeke as his old eyes once more swept the silent rock ridges.

"Then it's up to us to roost here and keep an eye on his plane," was Minty's suggestion.

"I don't like the idee o' that ship anchored close in here where any outsider could climb aboard," said Zeke. "Where she ought to be is out in the middle o' that lake with a quarter-mile o' water between her and shore."

"How'd you git her there?" asked Minty, as he studied the plane. "I always had a hankerin' for knowin' how to handle one o' them contraptions. And right now that hankerin' is stronger'n ever."

But Zeke had his own ideas about the matter.

"I could float her out and anchor her there with a couple o' rock-slabs tied to her moorin'-lines," he explained. "Then she'd be where no one could sneak up on her."

"And how'd you git back?" demanded Minty.

"I'd blow up that air mattress of Lindy's and paddle ashore. And when our bush hawk shows back he can sail out to her in the same way."

"S'posin' he don't show back?"

"Then it's up to us," said Zeke, "to find out what's keepin' him away from a ship he'd never desert of his own free will."

But the shifting of the Snow-Ball to its new berth was no easy matter. And even with the plane safely anchored in mid-lake Zeke's troubles were not over. The inflated air mattress, from the first, proved a precarious craft. When halfway to shore, in fact, Zeke lost his balance and went overboard, with Minty's anxious eyes watching his struggles as he floundered about and finally resumed his perch on the little raft of rubber.

Minty, standing guard on his rock point, knew what would be needed, and needed at once. He dropped his rifle and lost no time in gathering wood and starting a fire. The flames were roaring by the time the wet and bedraggled Zeke crawled up the shore slope. His teeth were chattering and his language was blasphemous.

"Quit cussin'," admonished Minty, "and git out o' them clothes before they chill you to the bone."

Zeke's shirt was dry by the time he was ready to drink his tea. And his ill temper had departed by the time the dignity of clothing was restored to his sinewy old body.

"We can't squat round these embers no longer," he announced.

"What we've got 'o do is sleuth out them white-skinned Comanches who're musclin' in on our domain."

"Lead me to 'em," said Minty as he shouldered his pack and took up his rifle.

But Zeke, at the moment, was busy mounting a near-by ridge. He stood scanning the blue-misted slopes between him and the lowering sun. He squinted long and closely at the wooded crest across a wide valley studded with glacial headlands. And as he looked he saw a puff of smoke bloom for a moment against the hill-top spruce gloom at the same time a bullet whined over his head.

His reaction to that was automatic.

He dropped to the far side of the ridge, where he lay shouting for Minty to get under cover. But Minty disregarded that advice. He stood with his rifle at half-arm, studying the wooded crest across the valley. But the whine of a second bullet sent him ducking behind the shelter of a hardhead.

"They want fightin', eh?" he cried as he leveled his rifle along the stone

top. "Well, they'll git it a-plenty."

But, after a two-man council of war, they realized that closing in on the enemy was not so simple as it might seem.

"If they want to do it Injin style," said Minty, "it's okay with me. There's no reason why two can't play at that game."

"But dodgin' round rock corners ain't goin' to find Alan," Zeke protested. "And our first job is to git trace o' that boy."

If they declined to retreat, however, they made their advance a more circuitous one. When night-fall came they quartered off at an angle, advancing craftily from rock shadow to rock shadow, their old eyes searching every ridge slope and hollow. But they encountered no sign of life. When weariness overtook them one would sleep for two hours while the other kept watch.

"I don't like this lull in things," observed Zeke as he blinked about the silent ridges. "Makes me suspicious them swan-hunters might be puttin' something over on us."

"Let 'em try it," barked Minty after a look into his cartridge chamber.

Zeke's weathered old face remained troubled.

"But while we're pirootin' through these empty pine woods and indulgin' our personal appetite for lead-slingin' they might be back-trackin' to Alan's Snow-Ball Baby. And I don't want 'o see anything happen to that boy's ship."

"It won't," averred Minty, "while I've still got a trigger to pull."

"Then my vote," said Zeke, "goes to gittin' back to that plane and standin' watch there until Alan shows up."

Minty adjusted his blanket roll and tightened his belt.

"I reckon you're right for once," he conceded.

Seated on the barren shore of his sub-arctic island, Alan Slade knew a recurring pang of despair much sharper than any pain in his abused body.

His first task, he told himself, was to take in the circle of his world, the only world that remained to him. His steps grew steadier as he mounted the shore slope and worked his way up to one of the bolder ridge crests.

From that vantage point he carefully studied his island.

That island, he found, was not so large as it had first seemed. So far as he could see it was empty of animal life. And this seemed confirmed as he explored its irregular shoreline. Along the rockier shore to the east, where he had hoped to stumble on driftwood, he found nothing beyond a tangle of bleached boles and branches, the best of them little thicker than a caribou-prong. They were useful only as a reserve of firewood.

The thought of a fire reminded him that one of his first needs was a shelter of some kind. He knew the north too well to nurse much fear of marauding animals. More than wandering bear or wolf, his enemies there would be the voracious arctic mosquito and the black-fly that left a burning ring of poison about its bite.

Under one of the higher crests he found a rock-jut with an over-hanging lip that made a shallow cave. The floor of that cave, he saw, he could bed with dried moss and sedge grass. The face of it he could close in with loose rocks and a matrix of scrub-timber branches from the near-by slopes. It would not only protect him from wind and rain but with a smudge fire going in its entrance it would be a defense against mosquitoes and black-flies. It would, for the time being, be his home.

To it he carried his beef-tin and his chocolate, his sheath knife and his precious little can of fishhooks, together with every carefully salvaged foot of the equally precious cord that had been cut from his wrists and ankles. For on those strands of cord, he remembered, might yet hang his hope of deliverance. With the evening coolness deepening around him he felt the need of a fire. He regretted not having an ax.

CAIN AND ABEL: A CONTRAST

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 4:1-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous.—Hebrews 11:4.

The weed of sin is fast growing, and brings forth bitter fruit. The disobedience of Adam and Eve resulted in their being put forth from the garden, but that judgment did not terminate the awful plague of sin. We see it in this lesson showing forth in their son, as it has in all the sons of Adam down through the centuries.

It is a dark picture and one which would discourage us did we not know that redemption has been wrought out by "the second man, the Lord from heaven" (I Cor. 15: 47).

We have here two sons of Adam with their differing personalities, a clash and the first murder, and then one man, a vagabond on the face of the earth.

I. Two Sons (vv. 1-7).

The birth of a child is always an exciting occasion, and one can readily imagine what it must have meant when the first boy ever to be born put in his appearance. What joy, what concern for his welfare, what plans for the future! And then, what disappointment and sorrow!

But before speaking of that, let us observe how he and his brother differed in their interests and personalities. It is a surprising thing how completely different two sons in the same family can be.

Abel chose the work of a shepherd, much honored in the early history of man. Cain became a tiller of the soil, which with the passage of time has come to be more important than the other.

They also had a different viewpoint on worship. Cain was a religious man. He apparently was the first to worship, but he came in the spirit of one who recognized God only as his Creator, the One worthy of his homage. Abel came also with a gift, but his attitude was quite different. His offering spoke of sacrifice, the need of a covering for sin (cf. Gen. 3:21). It was more than homage, it was a plea for forgiveness.

The Lord's acceptance of Abel's sacrifice made Cain angry (v. 5). Here again he differed from Abel, for there was no angry response on his part. Abel had recognized God's desire in worship. Cain not only failed to do so, but rejected God's instruction and His plea (vv. 6, 7). Jealousy led to anger, and anger (as it so often does) led to

II. Murder (vv. 8, 9).

Instead of repentance and correction, the anger of Cain carried him to the awful conclusion of hatred, the taking of life. We tend to think of murder as a crime which only a desperately wicked man would commit. We hardly think of the "respectable" little sin of envy as being the root of murder, but it is, often and sometimes very quickly.

Actually there is no little sin, for it is the genius of sin to grow, to increase, to go step by step, yes, often by leaps and bounds, to its horrible fruition. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" (Jer. 17:9). Why trust it?

The deceitfulness of Cain's heart is shown by the callous evasiveness of his reply to God concerning his murdered brother. His sin brought God's question. It always does. Do not assume that you can hide from Him. It has been suggested that committing sin is like touching a burglar alarm—the bell rings, and one must answer for his act.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" is the perfect expression of the selfish and indifferent attitude of the world. Human beings are regarded as simply those to be exploited, beings upon whom they may prey. For example: Just to make money, men are willing to destroy a fellow man with intoxicating liquor, or break down his decency and morality by selling him indecent books or magazines.

Murder having taken one of the two sons, we find that the remaining one is just

III. A Vagabond (vv. 10-15).

Judgment for sin made Cain a wanderer and a fugitive. Never would he be able to get away from the cry of his brother's blood (v. 10). No wonder he said he could not bear it. But notice that his cry was not one of repentance or contrition, but only of fear, of retribution.

So God shows mercy, forbidding the judgment of men upon Cain. Vengeance belongs to God, and in this first murder He reserved judgment to Himself. Later He put upon man the responsibility of judging and punishing murder by death (Gen. 9:6), but here He put His protecting hand on Cain.

Yet, to be a fugitive, with no real abiding place on earth, and every man's hand against him, was indeed a heavy punishment. One could have wished that it had brought repentance, but it did not. May none of us go the way of Cain.

When you want to thicken gravy, put the flour and water into a wide-mouthed jar, with a screw top and shake well.

Use the tab in opening and closing slide fasteners. Don't force them. Before washing a "zip" garment close the zipper. Guard it in pressing so the teeth will not be thrown out of alignment.

If your bread is too fresh to slice easily, put it into the refrigerator to get thoroughly cold.

Clothes iron much easier if they are hung up carefully, pinned securely with plenty of clothespins and shaken occasionally to remove wrinkles.

They've separated the navigators and bombardiers from the pilots, because our schooling here is different and more varied and comprehensive. We cover a lot of technical subjects that the pilots will never come in contact with to any extent. We are under a different commandant and have an entirely different and more rigorous training schedule. The post is being enlarged and will soon be twice its original size and still it will grow. I guess everyone realizes that the importance of the air force is second to none in most phases of this war.

I understand you'd like a photo of me for your display. Right now I honestly haven't any, but I hope to soon. We seldom have time during the day to take pictures. My camera has been loaded and unused for three weeks, so you can see why a picture hasn't been forthcoming yet.

Well, we have a couple exams tomorrow as usual, one in meteorology and one in air force operations class. So, I reckon I'd better do a little studying. My best regards to everyone.

Sincerely,

Dear Folks:

Just a little line to let you know of my change in address again. I'll mer, New Mexico, Glider Detachment. Outside of my address I guess be at Clovis, New Mexico. My address will be John Gotham, Ft. Sumner, I haven't much to write about. I am going to be an instructor on the ships to be used to teach fellows to fly before they go into glider flying. I see by the T P Times that some of my friends have enlisted in the air corp. Lots of luck fellows, and say "Swartz" you were always interested in flying, how about signing up for Glider training. Citizens Service Committee:

Dear Mrs. Rogers:

Received your letter and certainly was glad to hear from you. Sorry to hear that you did not receive my letter, but I did write one telling you I received the package, and also the Tinley Park Times.

I read all about the dance that the Citizens Service Committee gave. Glad it was so successful. It sure is nice to get these things from your friends back home.

You mentioned the USO in your letter. From my experience they are doing some wonderful work. It seems when we move to a new city the first place we look up is the USO. They always treat us very nice and do help us a lot. They have entertainment for the men, have libraries, and they have writing rooms, furnish us with all the stationery we want, so all in all they are doing a fine job. Anything you do for them really helps the boys from home too.

Sorry, I missed the big homecoming in Tinley. Really would like to have been there. Hope I won't miss the one next year. Would like for you to send me Emory's address for we are right near La. Might have a chance to see him if he will be here for some time.

Glad to hear that your church is going along so successful. We always get liberty Sunday mornings, so we can attend Church services. They did not have a Lutheran Church at Dickson, Tenn., so went to the Methodist Church and they sure gave us a grand welcome. Also attended your church here at Gulf Port last Sunday. Hope to get a chance to get back home for a short time soon, and if I do will tell you all about my travels. They are granting seven day leaves starting July 13th, so have made my application to get one. Here's hoping it goes thru.

I just got over a slight case of fever, but aside from that have been feeling fine. The weather is quite warm down here during the day, but cools off nicely in the evening just comfortable for sleeping. Expect to be here for quite some time, so may be my mail will chance up with me now.

Thanking you again for all the nice things you have done for me and all the other boys.

Give my best regards to all the folks and here's hoping I get to see electric service to a large area of which will protect continuity of northern Illinois and release hundreds of railroad cars for war traffic should transportation pinch develop next winter.

Dear Folks:

I've been a bit lax in writing letters recently, but I'm catching up now. The Times, of course, is coming regularly, and is more appreciated every time.

We've finished six of our nine weeks pre flight school here, and within another three weeks we expect to go to flight school, goodness knows where. Maybe Georgia, maybe Florida, maybe out here in California or maybe some forsaken place in some western desert. We'll know when we get there.

Guess Don Mason is about ready to go into foreign service. Lucky dog, wish I was myself. I'm hoping to see Ray Mason when he comes out here, if he does, and if I haven't left first. Tell him please to let me know when he leaves. Pretty quiet on the coast yet. Our squadron has moved to different barracks and our new number is 82.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"Sacrament" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, July 12.

The Golden Text was, "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup" (1 Cor. 11:28).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore; but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus. As soon then as they were come to land, they saw a fire of coals there, and fish laid thereon, and bread. Jesus saith unto them, Come and dine. And none of the disciples durst ask him, Who art thou? knowing that it was the Lord" (John 21:4, 9, 12).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "This spiritual meeting with our Lord in the dawn of a new light is the morning meal which Christian Scientists commemorate. They celebrate their Lord's victory over death, his probation in the flesh after death, his ex-emplication of human probation, and his spiritual and final ascension above matter, or the flesh, when he rose out of material sight" (p. 35).

War Production and Electric Power in Northern Illinois

Within a short span of time northern Illinois has become a great center of war production, turning out tanks, tractors, trucks, guns, ships and airplane engines as well as tons of steel for thousands of war uses on the land, on the sea and in the air.

In the manufacture of all these war materials and equipment, electric power is essential. It is our job, above all else, to supply power to these industries making the implements needed by our armed forces.

"WE'VE HELPED. HAVE YOU?"

AMERICAN LEGION WEEK FOR

★ We've Helped ★

The fighting spirit which 25 years ago was pushing them through the Argonne forests will be turned loose in the interests of their newest buddies—the service men of World War II—by the American Legion the week of July 20. Throughout Chicago and its suburbs, these men who know only too well what off-duty recreational facilities can mean to the man in uniform will step out, 15,000 strong, to provide a whirlwind finish for the United Service Organizations War Fund campaign. Armed with receipt books, they will ask everyone—in homes, in neighborhood stores, in shops and offices—"Have you helped?" as part of their American Legion Week for U.S.O. The window sticker, shown above, will offer the only immunity in the "all-out" attack, and by the closing time on July 27 Legionnaires propose to have them on at least a million windows throughout the Chicago district.

FRANKFORT

Mrs. Herbert Kohlhaugen

About 200 friends and relatives called on Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Bruggemann Sunday July 12 when they held open house from 7 to 10 p. m. in their home to offer their congratulations in honor of their 25th anniversary, which they celebrated on July 7. The home was beautifully decorated with cut flowers. Mrs. Geo. Elsner, Mrs. John Weitendorf and Mrs. Gilbert Voss poured. A delicious buffet luncheon was served. The table covered with a lace cloth and a large crystal bowl filled with snapdragons and baby breath and lighted tapers was very beautiful. The buffet had a large wedding cake with lighted candles. Miss Evelyn Bruggemann, daughter of the couple greeted the guests. They received many gifts, flowers and cards. Telegrams from relatives unable to attend were received. All wish the couple many more years of wedded life.

Mrs. Charles Scheer and Mrs. Blanche Mitchell are spending a week's vacation in Berrien Springs, Mich. Mr. and Mrs. Holl and Georgia Mitchell spent Sunday there. Mrs. Scheer and Mrs. Mitchell are having other relatives spend the week with them there.

The local Red Cross will meet every Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 p. m. in the school auditorium. Their work is to make surgical dressings. Women should come with head bandages, a knife and a foot ruler.

The Home Bureau members of the Frankfort, Homer and New Lenox unit met in New Lenox Tuesday in the Methodist church. Mrs. Hoffman gave an interesting demonstration on canning. Election of officers was held with Mrs. Louis Holm as chairman and Secretary, Mrs. Robt. Hohenstein. They will have no meeting in August. They expect to have a theater party August 12.

The Royal Neighbors held their July meeting in the Village hall. The principle business which was discussed is the annual convention which is to be held in September in Frankfort. Mrs. Daley was present to give instruction in regard to this event. A social hour was enjoyed and refreshments served.

Mr. and Mrs. Coucie were honored during last week by the local school board members and their wives. A supper was served and a social evening was spent. They were presented with a gift. Miss Lankenau and Miss Dunn were added guests. Mr. Soucie has accepted a position in Monroe Center for the next year and will leave for that place in the near future.

Mrs. Stanley Johnson entertained her club from Lockport in her home last Friday. Pinochle was played. Mrs. Water Harnack and Mrs. Leo Peterson were guests. Luncheon was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Folkers entertained the Will and Southern Cook Co. Rural Letter Carriers and Auxiliary in their home in Frankfort July 10. During the evening Mr. & Mrs. Edw. Warning were elected to serve the local district as delegates to the State Convention to be held in Springfield July 23, 24 and 25. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Folkers and Charlene will leave for the convention Monday. The members of the Youth Fellowship of the Frankfort Methodist

DON'T CALL WASHINGTON— unless you must!

• With the war effort of 27 United Nations centered upon it, Washington is probably the busiest city in the world. It is fast outgrowing its physical limits—and its telephone facilities.

Since Pearl Harbor, Long Distance telephone traffic in and out of Washington has jumped 48½%. Calls of vital importance sometimes get caught in the crush.

New construction would normally take care of the increased load. But copper, rubber and aluminum are even more critically needed for the fighting fronts.

So we must ask you to cut down on every possible Washington call—so that Army, Navy and Government can have clear "talk-tracks" to get America's biggest job done. We know we can count on your co-operation.

These suggestions, offered especially for Washington, also apply to other busy cities across the country.

1. As far as possible, avoid all Long Distance calls not directly related to the war effort.

2. If you must make a Long Distance call, place it in the off-peak hours—

Little Chapel

Thousands of mothers and fathers throughout the nation will be interested to learn of the "Little Chapel on the Pier", in Chicago, now nearing completion by the Illinois Works Projects Administration.
 Because of the great numbers of men stationed on the pier for training, who are replaced from time to time by other contingents, this chapel promises to become one of the best known churches in the nation, according to Chas. P. Casey, Illinois WPA Administrator.

Located on the first deck of the famous structure, Chicago Navy Pier the chapel opens its doors to all denominations. Protestants, Catholics, Christian Scientists, Jews,
 Mormons and other religious faiths

Vegetable Preparation and Processing Guide

Stock Those Shelves

Well-justified pride is yours if you can gaze at the summer's crop of vegetables, nicely put up on your canning shelf for comes the winter, you have but to open one of those brightly colored jars with tomatoes, peas, beans, beets or carrots or any of the other vegetable favorites and part of that well balanced meal is planned and on its way to the table.

Time was when canning was an unscientific and highly questionable process, but all this is past now, and you can now put up any of the vegetable and victory garden produce, and be certain that it will be attractive to look at, good to eat, and will not be spoiled if you take the simple precautions that make for successful canning.

Safest method for canning vegetables is by the pressure cooker. Your concern here is to be sure to process the exact length of time the vegetable requires, as indicated by the table at the top. If not properly processed, the food will spoil.

Selecting Vegetables. Young, tender vegetables, freshly gathered, give you the best finished product. Canning cannot remedy tough, over-mature produce, so do not expect it to. Nor, should you expect to can what you cannot dispose of at the table while fresh. Commercial canners use vegetables grown to order, not leftovers, so it behooves you, homemakers, to take a tip from them.

Cleanliness is important. You'll enjoy letting cool water trickle, trickle, trickle over the vegetables to free them entirely of every trace of soil. Any soil left on the vegetable can carry bacteria, and thus be a major factor in spoiling an otherwise good product.

Process the jars of vegetables as soon as they are packed, never allowing them to stand around until you get to the serious business of canning.

Spoilage Factors. Mold, yeast and bacteria cause food spoilage. They lurk in air, soil and water and must be destroyed by proper processing if the food is to keep in perfect condition. Then to assure food keeping well be sure the jar cover is fastened as tightly as possible. This you can do by any number of available devices.

It is also important when packing the jars, after vegetables have been precooked and you are spooning them into the jars, to wipe off any excess before fastening on the cover. Any small particles which lodge between cover and jar will cause spoilage.

Cooling the Jars. Proper cooling is important to the good keeping of canned food. Do not

Lynn Says:

How many jars will it take? That's the question many home canners are asking when it comes to figuring the number of jars she should have.

Here are hints on some of the common canned goods:

Tomatoes: 3 pounds yield a quart jar.

String Beans: 1 bushel yields 17 to 20 quart jars.

Greens: 1 bushel spinach yields 13 pints; 1 bushel dandelions yields 15 pints.

Corn: 100 ears of golden Bantam makes about 14 pints.

Beets: 12 pounds yields 6 pints in the stalk, 2 pint jars, if cut in pieces.

Peas: 1 bushel pods yields 14 pints.

Intelligent Animal

By

STANLEY CORDELL

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

EZRA POWERS who is Groveton's oldest inhabitant and Andy Small, the next oldest inhabitant, are forever arguing and reminiscing. The other day I found them arguing over the relative merits of cats and dogs.

"Dogs are the brainy ones. You can't lose 'em," said Andy. "No matter how far from home they go they can always get back. There aren't many cats that can do that." He paused and smiled dreamily, while those of us who were fortunate enough to be on hand at the moment, held our breaths. We feared that the argument might end there, yet we knew somehow that Andy had a story to back up his theory. His next statement, therefore, was something of a surprise.

"However," said Andy, smiling craftily, "I can tell you a story about a dog who didn't come back."

Ezra Powers, though plainly suspicious, took the statement as an acknowledgment of defeat, and smiled willingly enough. "Go on," he said, "let's hear you disprove your own theory."

So Andy, as was his custom before beginning a yarn, filled and lighted his pipe and settled himself comfortably.

This here story (began Andy) is about a dog named Tamar.

A feller named Dave Cram was Tamar's owner. Dave lived up near North Falls about 25 years ago.

A feller named Dave Cram was Tamar's owner.

Dead now, he is. Killed when a timber log rolled off a truck and crushed him. Tamar's dead, too. Died of lonesomeness, they say.

Anyhow, this here Tamar dog was about the smartest hound you'd want to see. Dave taught her all sorts of tricks. She would fetch home from the store in a basket. She'd shove Dave's slippers under the stove along about dark of cold winter evenings. She'd sit in the bow seat of Dave's canoe and never move a muscle while Dave shot the craft through the Upper Rapids. She'd do most anything, and most of all find her way home alone.

Tamar would follow Dave to the woods every morning and most likely roam off by herself while Dave worked with the boys at Dakins' camp. Come nightfall, Dave would return alone, always knowing that sooner or later Tamar would show up and yip to be let in.

This Dave was sort of an odd stick. Every so often he'd get a restless itch and hie himself off to Boston or Portland for a couple of days' spree. Two years after he got Tamar, such a feeling took possession of him, and nothing would do but what he'd have to go. There was, however, the problem of Tamar to consider. Dave couldn't leave the poor brute to starve, and it wouldn't do much good to ask a neighbor to take her in. For he knew Tamar would come back to the cabin and mope around and whine till Dave got back.

And so in the end Dave decided upon a plan. He'd take the dog with him as far as Gilford and board her there at a public kennel, picking her up on his return trip. Gilford, Dave figured, was far enough away so that Tamar wouldn't know her way home and, therefore wouldn't make any serious attempts to get loose.

A day or two before Dave was ready to start Tamar began to act peculiar. She seemed nervous and became whiny. Dave attributed it to the dog's intelligence. He reasoned that Tamar knew he was going away and wanted to be taken along.

Tamar did, in fact, act more contented when Dave set out and whistled for the dog to follow. They traveled by stage to Gilford, and Dave had no difficulty in locating the public kennel. He exacted a promise from the keeper of dogs to pay extra special attention to Tamar, and paid the score before departing. At the last moment he noticed that Tamar was acting restless and nervous again, and he sort of hated to leave such an intelligent animal in the hands of a strange kennel owner.

Dave was gone six days. He returned to Gilford eagerly looking forward to seeing Tamar. But Tamar was gone. The dog had, according to the keeper of the kennel, jumped the fence the second day of her imprisonment and fled.

Dave was disappointed, but he smiled. Tamar, he knew, possessed that sixth sense that would lead her home. He hoped the neighbors had fed the dog.

Late that night Dave arrived home. But Tamar was missing. And there were no signs of her having been there. The next morning Dave inquired confidently of the neighbors, only to learn that none of them had seen hide nor hair of good old Tamar.

Dave walked into the village to make further inquiries, only to meet with like answers.

By now Dave was alarmed. He loved that dog as much as most folks love their children. So he hired a rig and drove about the countryside, stopping at every house he came to. But all to no avail. Tamar had simply vanished, apparently lost while trying to find her way home.

In desperation Dave inserted an advertisement in the North Falls weekly newspaper, offering a reward. When this brought no results, he advertised in other newspapers, and felt helpless and lonely while waiting for replies. He had already looked at some 20-odd dogs, only to discover that none of them even resembled Tamar.

But at length arrived a letter which described a dog that must certainly be Tamar. Dave hastened to Painesville, the nearest town to North Falls, midway to Gilford, and looked up the sender of the letter.

The letter-writer said that a strange dog had been living in his barn for almost a month. The dog was a vicious animal, and no one had been able to approach her.

When he heard that about viciousness Dave became a little doubtful, but he went out to investigate. And the moment he stepped into the barn, he knew he'd found the lost Tamar. A dull thumping sound greeted his ears. And there was Tamar lying in a corner, her tail thumping a steady tattoo on the barn floor.

Andy paused in his narrative, and whacked his pipe against a rung of the chain on which he was sitting.

"Which proves," said Ezra Powers triumphantly, "that I'm right and you're wrong."

"Which proves," said Andy, grinning, "just the opposite. Tamar, it turned out, was a heap more intelligent than I gave her credit for. After Tamar escaped from that kennel she set out on a beeline for home, which fact is proven because Painesville lies on a direct line between North Falls and Gilford."

"And why," asked Ezra, "didn't she keep going?"

Andy grinned again. "Why, you see," he explained, "Tamar had been acting queer, and when Dave found her lying there with three small pups to care for, it explained everything, even her viciousness toward the writer of that letter."

Greeting Cards Show a

Basic Social Urge

Man has always found some means by which to exchange greetings and salutations upon appropriate occasions. The papyrus salutations used by the Egyptians; the Apostle Paul's phrase "Grace to you and Peace" in his Epistles; the exchange of symbols such as gloves, garters, handkerchiefs, or bows, in the Dark Ages of Europe—all these were manifestations of this basic social urge.

This year marks the 100th anniversary of the appearance in England of the first known Christmas Greeting Card. The original card is now in the possession of the British museum.

In the United States the first greeting cards were the work of a Boston lithographer, Louis Prang—an exile of the German revolution of 1848—who made the public conscious of the value of fine art reproductions. His example soon led others to venture into the field—others who first published only Christmas cards, but who soon commenced to manufacture a wide variety of types of greeting cards. Shortly after the beginning of the Twentieth century, greeting card publishers began to spring up in increasing numbers.

After the early 1920s and continuing to the present time, the public demand for more and better greeting cards has continued to grow rapidly.

Today the exchange of greeting cards is the accepted means by which millions of Americans remember their friends and loved ones, not only at Christmas, but throughout the year. And the greeting card in America, by answering in its own modern way, social needs that are age-old, is rapidly becoming indigenous to our national life.

Big Wheels

During the rainy season only vehicles with two huge wheels six to eight feet high can traverse the pampas. After a few days of rain a main road in Paraguay or the Argentine pampas will be more like a muddy river bed than a road, and only oxen are strong enough to drag a wagon through the heavy mud. To keep the axles off the ground, the wheels are made very large, and they leave ruts two feet deep. On such roads automobiles are useless.

Use True Solar Time

Millions of people, particularly the Mohammedans, still use true solar time instead of mean solar time, and consequently, their clocks and watches are correct, or agree with standard time, on only four days of the year—April 15, June 14, September 1 and December 24, says Collier's. The maximum difference between them occurs on November 2, when it amounts to 16 minutes and 21 seconds.

The new steel helmet just adopted by the Army is no longer called a "tin hat." It's a "head bucket" and when you see one you'll know why. Our soldiers have changed much of their slang since the last war, but not their preference for Camel Cigarettes. Now—as then—Camels are the favorite. They're the favorite cigarette with men in the Navy, Marines and Coast Guard as well, according to actual sales records from service men's stores. If you want to be sure of your gift to friends or relatives in the service being well received, stop in at your local dealer's and send a carton of Camels.—Adv.

NEW IDEAS FOR HOME-MAKERS

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

UPHOLSTERY repair work is rather costly hand labor. However, if you can clear a corner where you may work on it a little at a time, it is easy to do. Use boxes or an old table to rest the piece on at a comfortable working height. Remove the outside covering first, keeping it whole to use as a pattern; then remove padding, springs and webbing, writing down everything you want to remember about how they were placed; also the amount of webbing used. Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages are sometimes further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.
